Taking its toll during an emergency

AMBULANCES responding to an emergency often get stuck in traffic at the toll booths.

Although most Malaysian motorists do give way, which is heartening to see, once an ambulance reaches the toll booth, it still has to wait for the vehicles in front of them to pass.

Why can't the toll operators lift the barrier and let whatever vehicles in front of the ambulance to go through?

Will it be big a loss to the operators to lose toll collection from a couple of vehicles each time an ambulance responding to an emergency arrives at the booth?

Will the authorities do something about this? Every second counts in an emergency response.
